ABSTRACT

This listing of historically important manuscripts and documents was prepared for the use of cadets, faculty, and outside scholars. While the strength of the collection lies in its coverage of the cadet and professional army careers of academy graduates, it is also rich in materials from the Revolutionary War era and includes records of the Post-Revolutionary War Army at West Point. The guide is arranged alphabetically by the name of the cadet, professor, academy associate, or the historical event. Each entry includes one or more of the following: (1) types of material in the collection (letters, diaries, maps, photographs, papers, scrapbooks); (2) number of items; (3) analysis and/or description of the collection items; (4) acquisition data; and (5) names of people or subjects prominent in the collection. FOREWORD

It is with considerable pleasure and satisfaction that this bibliographic guide is presented for the use of cadets, faculty and outside scholars. For too many years historically important manuscripts and documents have lain unannounced in the U.S. Military Academy Library. With this publication the research community of the nation is equipped with a preliminary guide to the USMA manuscript collection. It is our expectation that at a subsequent date we might present complete analyses of the entire manuscript holdings.

While the strength of the collection lies in its coverage of the cadet and professional army careers of Academy graduates, the careful researcher will note the richness of the Revolutionary War material. Additionally, the records of the Post-Revolutionary War Army at West Point are fruitful as a source of data.

The USMA Archives, reported herein as a 3,000 foot manuscript collection, is expected to publish a preliminary inventory within the year. This set of records, retained with the consent of the Archivist of the United States and the Adjutant General of the US Army, is a national treasure of cadet records serviced by a special, professional staff within the USMA Library Organization.

It is my hope that this finding aid will become a common tool in the research apparatus of the military historians of this nation.

INTRODUCTION

The exploitation of manuscript resources is at once a necessity satisfied and a privilege granted. It is the curator's responsibility to meet the demands necessary for the bona fide researcher to consult original materials. It is, likewise, the researcher's responsibility to comply with the curator's conditions regarding the privilege of using and handling the documents. In order that such resources withstand the physical stress of consultation, the requisites of utilization must remain in balance with the requisites of preservation.

One notes with certain interest that at this point in time and space when the products of the pen and press are at a record high, the demands for documents of the past are being received more rapidly than ever before. The satisfaction of these demands, it must be recognized, has been aided by the technology of our age. We have tools suddenly available which make possible the creation of facsimiles with relative swiftness and ease. But there are problems here.

The xerographic facsimile, for example, presents in "hard copy" useful automechanical scrivenations conveying meaning. As working copies, as security copies, and (when stained with tea and dried flat) as display pieces, they have utilitarian value both to the researcher and curator. They are doubtlessly here to stay. Make no mistake, however, xerography can be hard - mighty hard - on the original manuscript. This extra handling, too often by unskilled assistants, may result in breaks, tears, and fading which would otherwise not have occurred. In addition, it should be more generally recognized that no such facsimile can convey the evidence which original paper, watermark, stain, calligraphy, seal, cancellation, or pigmentation carry. And the thrill of momentary confrontation by an historic presence, that thrill which comes to the military historian when handling an original Gustavus Adolphus, a Napoleon, or a Clausewitz, a Jackson, a Rommel, or a MacArthur is utterly lost to the machine.

The extralibrary use of xerography by this institution is as an extension of the reference concept. All fees collected are service charges, and all copies generated carry local identification. No real or literary rights residing with the institution are surrendered with the facsimiles. Requests for extensive copying are respectfully declined. The manuscripts, like the rare books and archives, are for controlled use in the library. There are circumstances when even Mohammed must go to the mountain.

It might not be inappropriate at this juncture to recall a body of material which as a potential source of data lies somewhere between manuscripts and books: Newspapers and pamphlets. A contemporary newspaper account of a personality or event might well be considered as much an original source as a handwritten letter or diary. Tom Paine's Common Sense was but one of a miltitude of contemporary sentiments expressed by the pamphleteers at the time of the American Revolution. Perhaps the quality of both our scholarship and of our curatorship could be improved by increased familiarization with and consultation of these materials. Where originals of these resources are not owned, the several microform media often render their content readily available to today's scholar.

That the progeny of the chemothermal facsimile machines are adding to the paper explosion is indisputable: What the typewriter began arithmatically, today's contrivances are continuing geometrically. That the microform media make possible the retention and utilization of vast stores of valuable material is equally indisputable. But let us add to our daily literary litany: Miniturization merely reduces in size; it makes no claim to make men wise. We librarians and curators shall continue to lead all willing and able horses to our water, be it original or facsimile, but the motivation to master the material must come from within the man. Should the Preliminary Guide act as a catalyst in this process then the thing will have been well worth while.

This number of the USMA Library Bulletin has been issued as a finding aid for the use of researchers, dealers, collectors, and librarians. It contains citations to manuscript holdings received before the 16th of October 1967. The Preliminary Guide lists both analyzed and unanalyzed collections. In the case of the former, the results of subject and personal analyses are recorded. Citations to unanalyzed collections are preceded by asterisks. It should be noted that secondary entries exist for unanalyzed portions of analyzed collections. The reader will observe, also, that analytics for the Sylvanus Thayer Papers, having been copied from the index to a locally printed edition of these manuscripts, differ somewhat in treatment from those for other collections.

For a great deal of the analytic work we are indebted to Mr. James Pearson. Many of the unanalyzed unit entries were established and prepared by Mrs. Roy E. (Patricia) Black. The entire text was typed by Miss Sandra L. Bristol and proofread by her and Miss Elizabeth J. Connolly. Their support and perseverance, in a large measure, made this Guide possible.

To the Officer Commanding at West Point and its dependencies

Sir,

You will immediately make a distribution of the Troops under your Command to the posts so that the whole may be in a state of defence at the shortest notice – You will also have each work supplied with ten days provision, wood, water and Stores and keep up constantly that Supply – and you will take every other precaution for the security of the Post. – The Enemy will have acquired from General Arnold a perfect knowledge of the defences, and will be able to take their measures with the utmost precision. This makes it essential every vigilance and care should be [illegible] for its preservation. You will do every thing in your power to gain information of the Enemy's designs, and give me intelligence as early as possible of any movement against you.

A party of Militia who have been employed cutting wood and another as guards to the Stores at Fish kill that have been called in are to return to their destination.

Colonel Gouvion will remain a few days at this Post to assist in the necessary arrangements.

Sir,

Having no longer any ties which can bind me to my native country — no prospects — nor any friends — I intend by the first opportunity to proceed to Paris with the view of obtaining, thro' the interest of the Marquis de La Fayette, an appointment (if possible) in the Polish Army. In the event of the interference of France in behalf of Poland this may easily be effected — at all events it will be my only feasible plan of procedure.

The object of this letter is respectfully to request that you will give me such assistance as may lie in your power in furtherance of my views.

A certificate of "standing" in my class is all that I have any right to expect.

Any thing farther — a letter to a friend in Paris — or to the Marquis — would be a kindness which I should never forget.

Most respectfully Yr. Obt. St.

Washington, January 27, 1864.

Major General Grant

Your note of the 14th. inst. asking the appointment of J. D. C. Hoskins as Cadet at large to West Point was handed me by Mr. Washburne three or four days ago. It shall be done. There being no vacancy now we must wait for one; but the Secretary of War and myself, between us, will not let the case be forgotten. Meantime I suggest that if you can you ascertain the boys full Christian name, instead of using the initials.

Yours very truly
A. Lincoln.

Maj. Gen. Halleck, Richmond Va.

Since receipt of your dispatch of of 3d I think it will be advisable to leave Hunter alone for the present.

Although it would meet with opposition in the North to allow Lee the benefit of Amnesty I think it would have the best possible effect towards restoring good feeling and peace in the South to have him come in. All the people except a few political leaders South will accept what ever he does as right and will be guided to a great extent by his example.

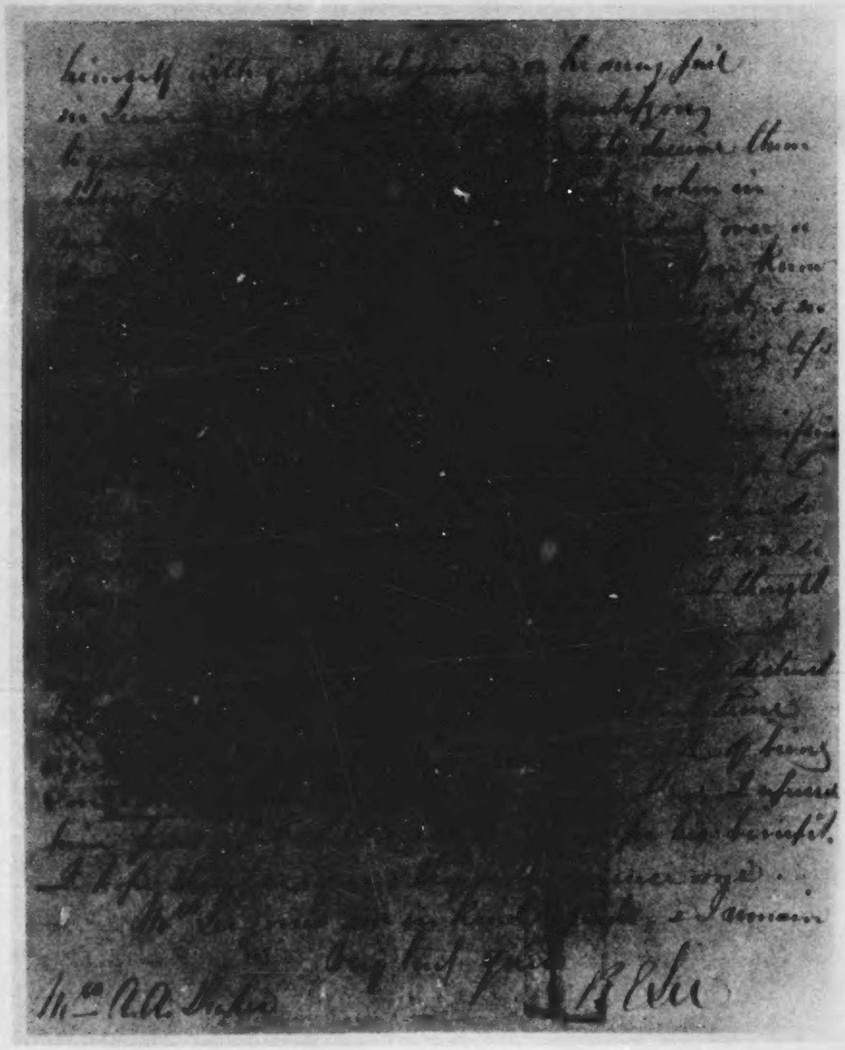
U.S. Grant: "Although it would meet with opposition in the North to allow Lee the benefit of Amnesty I think it would have the best possible effect towards restoring good feeling and peace in the South to have him come in." (To Major General Henry Halleck. Washington, 6 May 1864)



Robert E. Lee: "Cadets deceive themselves sometimes by thinking they study, when in reality they do not, & are satisfied by reading over or devoting a reasonable time to their lessons. You know the difference between that & understanding it, & nothing but the last will answer, & with nothing less might they be satisfied." (To Mrs. A.A. Draper. West Point, N.Y., 21 December 1852)
